The Graduate School of Public Policy and Civic Engagement was established in 2011 by the merging of the Graduate School of Public Administration, which was established in 1980, and the Graduate School of NGOs, which was established in 2000. With the merger, this institution is the first of its kind in the world to specifically pursue public governance in the state and civil society sector.

The Graduate School is committed to playing a leading role in contributing to the public good in all social sectors, including local administrative autonomy and global governance fields. To this end, the Graduate School vows to foster talent equipped with theories and practice for fulfilling the doctrine of the inseparability of knowledge and practice. Intelligence and capability acquired in the courses are intended for use in pursuing self-development and making a valuable contribution to mankind and society.

This Graduate School consists of five departments that offer a total of 11 major courses.

| Studies in Graduate School of Public Policy and Civic Engagement |

Department of Policy

The Department of Policy offers one major courses : Public Policy, The Public Policy course offers basic knowledge on the operation of and policies by public institutions such as the government and corporations. In addition, Interdisciplinary or transdisciplinary research and lectures are carried out on international relations, security policies of surrounding nations, security policy theory, international organizations and multi-party security theory, state strategy theory, war and peace theory, diplomacy policy theory, etc.

Department of Health Administration

The Department of Health Administration offers two major courses : Nursing Administration and Hospital Administration. The Nursing Administration major aims to cultivate the students' leadership with a view of becoming leaders in nursing, and seeks to respond to the changing medical environment in this 21st century that requires the development of excellent nursing personnel and the cultivation of new leaders. The Hospital Administration course aims to foster experts in the field of hospital administration who can understand the rapidly changing medical environment, while predicting and preparing for what the future may hold.

Department of Social Welfare

The Department of Social Welfare offers two major courses : Social Welfare, Elderly Care Welfare. The Social Welfare course aims to foster experts in the field of social welfare capable of actively and professionally engaging in all courses, ranging from policy-making to the provision of specific services with a view to meeting our basic needs and improving our quality life. In addition, to address the needs of child care and protection, this course offers a specialized track focusing on child counseling. The Elderly Care Welfare course aims to foster experts in the care of elderly people.

The course guides the students in appreciating the basic theories and practice of social welfare, and also equips them with professional knowledge and skills. The curriculum is based on the comprehensive interdisciplinary research on elderly welfare with the objective of helping the elderly cope with everyday living and improve their quality of life. This course also aims to foster experts in the field of elderly care, capable of using preventive and comprehensive measures for assisting the elderly. With the rapidly aging society, the course allows students to obtain sufficient knowledge and understanding of the elderly society based on the humanitarian welfare philosophy. A balanced set of relevant professional skills is provided.

Department of Civil Society and NGOs

The Department of Civil Society and NGOs offers one major course, Civil society and NGOs. We must protect and promote human rights, welfare and abundance achieved by the civic society in the 21st century. We must also realize the alternative values of peace, co-existence, co-prosperity and service. To this end, the Civil Society and NGOs seeks to explore the philosophical and social-scientific reflection on the state and the market, as well as on civic life values. To effectively push for civic movements, it is imperative that we systematically design and effectively manage NGOs, and consequently develop policies on diverse issues. In this connection, the NGO/NPO policy and management courses are designed to enable students to cultivate the theories and practical knowledge of non-profit management. This is aligned with the object of identifying the NGOs' organizational behavior, enhancing the students' ability to develop policies on and evaluate local and overseas NGO issues, and effectively achieving the NGOs' visions and missions.

Department of Global Governance

The Department of Global Governance offers one major course, Global Governance. The Department is specialized in International Development Cooperation and confers the Master Degree in International Development. In this era of globalization, having an in-depth understanding of international systems, including politics, economy, society and culture from the global governance perspective is essential to be able to respond to the changing world order. This understanding must extend beyond the framework of understanding anchored on the state and nation in order to cope with the 21st century trends. To this end, the Global Governance course seeks to offer an interdisciplinary approach to global governance theories and practice and the global agenda, based on social science and humanities. The course also explores an alternative international order that is human-oriented and sustainable in the global civic society. In particular, the course offers the specialized curriculum of international development cooperation.
